LOCAL FOUR

the fourth knock-in Arthur Rice stopped the ball with a clever bankhand, which sent it rolling slowly through the goal.

A Wild Rally. The close of this seventh period saw the wildest play of the game. There were several minutes of play remaining after the Baldwin-Castle score, and Oahu drove the ball to the upper end of the field; and made a desperate effort to score through the mauka goal, which would have tied the score and given the locals the down-hill advantage for the next count. Four separate and distinct times the ball hovered between the posts, but each time Frank Baldwin, or Collins, or Harold Rice, or Fleming, made a desperate save, and sent it out of danger toward the sideboards. Try as they would, the blue players couldn't get that much-needed goal, and after the bell rang the ball went out of play a few feet to one side of the pillars.

Here the Oahu supporters almost gave up hope. That had been the great chance to even matters and start off the final period with the advantage, they argued, and it was too much to expect the team to continue pressing the fight in mauka territory.

But Oahu had the encouragement of pulling down a hopeless lead, which Maui was suffering the moral handicap of seeing sure victory snatched away, and the telegraph told in the final stages of the struggle.

Maui Dangerous. Maui opened with a rush, and carried the ball down the field for what would almost certainly have been the winning goal, but time and again the Oahians made a miraculous save, and finally they worked the ball back to the upper end, and started to make things hot for the visitors. Sam Baldwin finally lined out a shot for goal, and Harold Castle, riding neck and neck with a Maui man, gave it the last touch needed to help it over the line.

The score was tied, but four minutes remained to play, and Oahu was hitting down!

And in the last minutes of this red-hot game, Maui nearly turned the trick by scoring a deciding shot through the difficult goal.

Men and mounts were going for all that was in them, and again Maui seemed the stronger. But Walter Dillingham had a little in reserve and catching the ball on his stick as it was perilously near to goal, he laced it over to the Eva boards, and had it three-quarters of the way down the field when the gong sounded the end of the last period.

Heaving ponies and exhausted men came off the field to prepare for the extra period of play that would determine the winner. The luck was with Oahu, for, although the rules say that in case of a tie the ball is thrown in at the center of the field, there is no change of goal, and, on a sloping field like Maunaloa, the locals, knocking with the slope of the ground and the wind, had a big edge on the situation.

The Deciding Safety. Lieutenant Naylor, hoping most earnestly that he would not be compelled to call a foul and thereby end the game in an unsatisfactory way, bowed the willow between the ponies' legs. Walter Dillingham caught it and sent it on its way toward the Maui posts. It was the last ditch for the Valley Islanders, and they knew it, and fought accordingly. Three times a score seemed certain, and three times Oahu missed by narrow margins.

The fourth time, instead of scampering to their positions for the knock-in, the players crowded together.

"What's the matter?" "Was it a foul?" "Anyone hurt?" A volley of excited questions was fired by the spectators.

And then came the explanation. David Fleming had hit a safety, subtracting one-quarter of a goal from the Maui score, and ending the game. Of course, it wasn't an intentional safety. He had seen what he thought was a certain goal coming and had tried to deflect it from the posts, but the ball had gone off his stick at an angle, and had crossed the line. After three minutes' play in the extra period, the game was over, and Oahu had secured one leg on the cup.

Maui Faster at First. The game up to half time saw Maui playing rings around Oahu. The local team didn't seem able to get going, and appeared to be suffering from a bad attack of stage fright.

Frank Baldwin, the most dangerous hitter on the Maui team, was left practically alone, to get off with spectacular runs and marvelous starts that kept the ball perilously near the blue goal. Walter Dillingham, usually the coolest and most reliable of players, was missing easy bankhands, and wasn't paying anywhere near to form.

Arthur Rice was badly off, and Harold Castle seemed to be having all sort of trouble with his mounts, which kept him out of the game a good part of the time.

All the more credit then, for the blue brace and ultimate victory. A team that can pull itself together and deliver the goods against odds, is a good team to tie up to in the long run.

And all credit to the losers, who carried their keen disappointment behind the smiles of true sportsmen, and who didn't beef over the hard luck which kept three of their best ponies out of the game at a time when they were most needed. Individually, as good fellows, and collectively as good polo players, the men from Maui deserve the highest praise.

The game was full of incident, but free from accident, and there wasn't a single spill to mar the day's sport.

"It was one of the cleanest games I ever saw," said Lieutenant Naylor, the ninth man on the field. "Only once or twice was there any questionable riding, and then it was entirely unintentional, and not sufficient to warrant calling a penalty in a game of this kind. It was a clean fight throughout.

To describe Saturday's game in detail would require several pages of type, for the ball moved fast, and the periods were replete with brilliant hitting and daring riding. There were several runs that stood out as remarkable, however, one of them being an uphill goal by Frank Baldwin, where he carried the ball the entire length of the field in two shots to a score, a feat that no player who is familiar with the Maunaloa field would have thought possible. It was about the hardest hitting ever seen here.

At one time or another every player started, but to sum the game up briefly Maui played better when their ponies were fresh, while Oahu didn't seem to get together as a scoring and defensive machine until both men and mounts had gotten over a streak of wiliness that characterized the play of the opening periods.

The next game of the series will be played Wednesday afternoon, between Maui and the Fifth Cavalry. If Maui loses, it will be out of the running for good, but if the Valley Isle team wins, there is still the chance of a three-way tie, such as last year's tournament produced.
